

Colours of the Sphere

Advances in technology have brought great opportunities for artists to explore new ways of working.

In this artwork viewers choose the route they wish to make as they drive through the 3D virtual world, revealing previously contributed stories of colour.

As the work travels around the country we are collecting further contributions to be added into the piece. We are seeking as wide a range of contributions as we can, from the young and the old alike, crossing all boundaries of community, gender, backgrounds and lifestyles. Every contributor has a valuable message to share about their understanding and reflection upon this human phenomena.

The final stage of the project will be the development of a 'Colour analysis engine' allowing us to search the contributions for key words and phrases - seeking to reveal in our generation how people are giving meaning to colour at this time in history.

Please make your contribution and bring your friends and loved ones to makes theirs too. Everybody has something valuable to say about their perception of colour. It is part of the language of art and science, culture, narrative and metaphysics: a descriptor of passion and jealousy, a signifier of enlightenment and despair. It transcends physical, rational foundations in a language of visual poetry.

www.coloursofthesphere.com

University of Portsmouth

